WOUND FATAL

Prentice Boblitt Dies From Effects of Gunshot Wound. Burial Friday at Camp Ground.

After lingering for but a little over twenty-four hours after being shot Prentice Boblitt died at the home of his father, Mr. R. C. Boblitt, last Wednesday night at 8 o'clock. From the time that Mr. Boblitt was wounded it was thought that there was no chance for him to recover. Mr. Boblitt himself realizing that death was bound to occur. Every attention was shown Prentice by members of the family, by loving friends and by the three physicians, Dr. Mudd, Dr. McChord and Dr. J. N. Shehan, but in vain. And after death an almost constant line of friends passed into the Boblitt home to pay their respects to the dead and express their sympathy for the family.

The funeral services were conducted at the Methodist church Friday morning, Rev. King preaching the sermon. The remains were interred in Camp Ground cemetery Friday afternoon. Six of the dead boy's friends acted as pall bearers. Will and Robt. Russell, Will Greene, Shaker Robertson, Louis Kelly and Lonnie Campbell.

Prentice Boblitt was twenty-six years of age and was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Boblitt and had lived here for about ten years. He was a young man of fine manners and good business qualities and was very popular with a host of friends. No death that has occurred here in many years has so aroused the sympathy of the community as did the taking off of this young man, who was just on life's threshold.

The deceased is survived by his parents and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Lev Brown, Mrs. Beattie Riedel, Neal, Clelland and Allen Boblitt, to whom we extend our sincere sympathy.

To Mother and Father.

(In Memory of Prentice Boblitt.)
How feeble are words to carry consolation to hearts bereaved of a beloved son.

A tender clinging vine intertwined with sweet memories from the hour the Angel first gave to your home a gentle spirit of light that flitted in and out like a gleam of sunshine.

No one can fill his place in the vacant chair; no one can take his place in your hearts. You would not have the void filled if you could. It will be a sacred thought in the years to come to parents and friends that he shed radiance in the home as long as he lived.

It will be a blessed recollection that he grew up to love and be loved by those who will ever cherish so tenderly his memory sweet and pure.

Dear mother and father I know how impossible it is to silence your grief with words; the heart pleads for utterance in tears and let it speak thus. We bow in sorrow in the taking of your beloved one, feeling that while the opened fruit may be gathered it seems cruel that the bud be taken before it even had chance to unfold its blossoms and leaves, but in nature fruit falls as do the blossoms and leaves.

In the way of kind nature this is perhaps best, and in the taking from your arms of your dear son you will try to accept the cross and bear it, believing that the bud will yet blossom and bear with the Angels while the spirit of the pure has flown.

Burned To Death.

Death in a very sad form visited the home of Mr. John Deering last Saturday when his fifteen-year-old daughter, Bettie, died from burns received by her on the preceding day. The girl was standing in front of an open fire when her clothing became ignited. Being thoroughly frightened and losing all control of herself she dashed into the yard where the wind fanned the flame until she was enveloped in fire. After suffering intense pain she died the next day.

Mr. Deering lives on the McElroy place near Simmstown in the eastern part of this county.

Slightly Injured.

Mr. John M. Adams was slightly injured last Friday and narrowly escaped serious injury. Mr. Adams is the Auctioneer at the Farmers Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Co. loose leaf market. On Friday after finishing his sales he got in a buggy with Mr. Burr Fields to ride to town. When the little bridge just this side of the warehouse was reached the horse became frightened at the train and turned the buggy over the embankment, throwing the occupants to the ground. It was thought at first that Mr. Adams had suffered a broken arm or at least a sprained wrist, but further examination showed that he had been only bruised and considerably shaken up.

Tobacco Sales.

During the past week three sales of tobacco have been held on the markets of the Washington County Tobacco Warehouse Co. and the Farmers Tobacco Warehouse Co. About 150,000 pounds of tobacco have been sold at the three sales at prices ranging from six cents to twenty cents per pound, the average price having been from 13 cts to 15 cts per pound. The buyers have been Messrs. Moss, Lake and Howard. The tobacco which has been sold on the local market has brought very gratifying prices.

Sales.

Judge I. H. Thurman bought of the Brown heirs their farm, on the Little Beech, consisting of about 300 acres for $19,000.

McElroy & Wharton, real estate dealers, report the following sales: For Thos. Duncan to J. R. and Kent Smith farm of 176 acres, in Pleasant Grove neighborhood, at $55 per acre. For J. M. Elder to Robt. Mattingly farm of 94 acres, in Pleasant Run neighborhood, at $72 1/2 per acre. For Sam Ray to R. N. Ward farm of 155 acres, in Pleasant Run neighborhood, at $55 per acre.

Meeting Closes.

The series of services which have been in progress at the Presbyterian church came to a close Sunday. Dr. J. V. Logan, of Somerset, who has been conducting the services has endeared himself to the people of Springfield and has accomplished much good during his brief sojourn. Mr. Logan is not only an earnest and fervent Christian but is a scholarly man and an engaging public speaker. During the series of services several additions were made to the membership of the Presbyterian church.

CUPID'S ARROWS

Pierce The Hearts of Washington County People.—Weddings Of The Week.

Thompson—Leachman.

Miss Ella Thompson and Mr. Harvey Leachman will be united in marriage to-morrow evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Thompson. Father Hennessey will perform the ceremony that will make the young people man and wife. After the wedding the bridal party will be entertained at supper by Mrs. Thompson. The bride-to-be is the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson and is a young lady who is quite popular among a large circle of friends. Mr. Leachman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Leachman and is a prominent young farmer of the Pleasant Grove neighborhood.

Grigsby—Caldwell.

Mr. S. W. Caldwell, of Bullitt county, and Miss Mary E. Grigsby, daughter of Mr. John Grigsby, were married to-day at the residence of Rev. Father Hennessey. Father Hennessey performing the ceremony.

Sutton—Hall.

Mr. R. N. Hall and Miss Annie Sutton, both well known young people of the county, came to town last Saturday and were united in marriage by Rev. W. H. Williams.

Marriage Licenses.

Other marriage licenses issued during the past week are as follows: Ed Farris and Miss Luile Hanby; Hugh Leachman and Miss Bertha Edgerton; Harrison Coyle and Miss Ada Harmon; Chas. Simms and Miss Ethel Scott; John Earl Snider and Miss Annie Mary Clarkson; L. A. Kidwell and Miss Susie M. Thompson.

Death of Child.

Just before going to press last week word reached the office of The Sun that Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Edelen had lost their three-year-old son. This was an error which we wish to correct. The little child which was called by death was a little girl, little Mary Sibyl, aged 3 years and 2 months. The little child had been a sufferer most of her life, but a sweet and patient one. There was never a complaint, for even when her frail body was racked with pain and her head almost too heavy to lift from her pillow, she would answer "All right" when asked how she felt.

A sweet flower which at the longest could have blossomed but a few years here below has been transplanted to blossom and increase in loveliness eternally where there is no pain or suffering. Verily as the Master said of such as this little child is the Kingdom of Heaven.

A mother, father and sister survive to mourn their loss.

Laybrooke Honored.

Our fellow townsman, W. D. Claybrooke, was honored last week by being elected a director for two years of the National Citizens Life Insurance Co. This is probably the largest insurance company in the South and the honor conferred upon Mr. Claybrooke is a very distinct one but an honor well merited.

Card of Thanks.

To our many friends who aided and comforted us in our recent great bereavement we wish to express our heartfelt thanks and may God bless them for their goodness.

MR. AND MRS. R. C. BOBLITT AND FAMILY.

..Thanksgiving.. 1909

Every day's Thanksgiving if you live your life aright.
Every day's Thanksgiving if you look up to the light.
Every day's Thanksgiving—but today we celebrate
Around the family altar with enough on every plate.

So, father, carve the turkey;

And, mother, cut the pie.

The light of glad Thanksgiving

Brings a sparkle to the eye.

Thanksgiving for the harvest—kneel and happy tribute pay
To the Lord of Hosts who blesses with a glad Thanksgiving Day.

Every day's Thanksgiving when the heart is full of hope.

Every day's Thanksgiving if still up and on we grope.

Every day's Thanksgiving—but today we gather 'round
Where the laughter of the children is the sweetest music found.

So, father, wield the carver,

And, mother, pass the cake.

Thanksgiving songs are ringing

Till the very rafters shake.

Thanksgiving for God's mercies that are shed on our way.

And praise the God of Harvests for this glad Thanksgiving Day.

Every day's Thanksgiving, for we've blessings and to spare.

Every day's Thanksgiving if we live life on the square.

Every day's Thanksgiving—but today the kindred ties.

Gently draw us close together where the old-time homestead lies.

So, father, ask the blessing,

And, mother, say "Amen!"

Thanksgiving day is drawing

With the children home again.

Thanksgiving for the blessings as along life's road we stray,

And sing our songs of gladness on this good Thanksgiving Day.

Every day's Thanksgiving, let the skies be gray or blue.

Every day's Thanksgiving if our hearts beat strong and true.

Every day's Thanksgiving—but today is best of all.

For we gather 'round the table in response to mother's call.

So, father, lead the singing

With your strong and lusty bass;

And, mother, head the column

With a smile upon your face.

Thanksgiving, heartfelt, honest; and we sing along the way

Songs of praise unto the Master for this best Thanksgiving Day.

Chain The Dog and Turn The Boy Loose

That is exactly what many parents are doing here, and they oftentimes wonder who or what has ruined their boys.

They have been in school every day, but the teacher either does not teach them any morality or else his or her teaching is a failure! [The truth is the boys are on the streets from the time school closes until late at night. The street corner is the best place in the world for teaching vice, profligacy and crime; nearly all the bad language and idle, vicious habits of boys are taught on the streets at late hours of the night. Teachers may be able to accomplish a little in counteracting vice influences, but much of the "evil" labor is in vain until parents co-operate with them in keeping their boys off the street.

In regard to our schools, parents have duties to perform which they can ill afford to neglect. They should show to their children that they have an interest in the school. They should examine carefully the reports sent by the teacher, should see that their children are in school every day and that they are punctual; should assist and encourage their children to do all their school duties faithfully and well; should co-operate with the teacher in securing the prompt return of their children home after school, and talk freely with the teacher and principal in regard to same.—Harrodsburg Herald.

High School Notes.

Owing to the absence of so many of the debaters on last Friday afternoon the debate on "Country Life vs. City Life" was postponed until Friday week thus giving them two more weeks to worry how they shall avert the responsibility of a speech. It seems that some of the boys have an intense dislike for this kind of work. But, of course, that is not what made them stay at home last Friday.

To be social Professor believes that the whole class should stay in when one doesn't know his lesson. But Claytie says it is not fair to keep her in if Orrie does not know his Latin.

There will be no use of hunting after Thanksgiving day, because all the boys are sure going to hunt—their aim being to rid the country of all the rabbits and birds (including sparrows). We would certainly have good lessons if the boys knew them as well as they know the farms of the country that are not posted.

Professor says the boys must get out on the playground at recess. Especially Owen, 'cause he does nothing but make eyes at the girls.

O, you Holidays! If nothing else we can thank our venerable forefathers that they set aside some extra days of rest when we could lay by the hard duties of school and enjoy for one good day the pleasure and sport with dog and gun.

ESTRAY—About a week ago a black Poland China boar hog, weight about 300 pounds, strayed on my place. Owner can have same by paying for this local and for keeping of hog.

"TURKEY DRUNK"

An Old-Time Thanksgiving Custom Which Is Happily Now Obsolete.

"I remember when I was a boy that one of the great features of Thanksgiving time was what we called the 'turkey drunk,'" says a native of Western New York. "Folks didn't seem to kill their Thanksgiving turkey in those days until the forenoon of the day it was to be eaten, and it was the custom to get the bird most gloriously drunk and kill it while it was in that condition. They used to say that it made the turkey's last moments on earth happy, and it made its approaching death a matter of unconcern to the bird. More than that, it was believed that the brandy they filled the turkey up with gave the meat a flavor that no bird that died sober could ever have. I don't know whether that was so, but I do know that I can't get any turkey nowadays that has the peculiarly delicious flavor those brandy soaked birds of my beloved boyhood had. The turkey drunk was a great occasion. It was witnessed by the whole family and all the invited guests, if there were any. Two hours before killing the turkey the head of the family would fill a tescup or a tin cup, or sometimes a small gourd, with brandy. This he would take out to the poultry yard, where the turkey which was to provide the Thanksgiving dinner would be cooped up by itself in one corner, and place it on the ground in front of the turkey. Those fowls appeared to be fond of brandy, and the doomed bird would gobble up the intoxicating liquor with the relish of a confirmed old toper. Sometimes a particularly large and fat turkey would drink the entire contents of the cup.

"As soon as the bird was through drinking it would be let out of the coop, and in less than three minutes it would be staggering about the yard with as elegant a jig on as any rounder even enjoyed. If the victim was a gobbler his efforts to maintain his dignity under the influence of his loss were as funny as a circus clown's. Steadying himself by an effort, he would throw his head up, thrust his chest out, lower his wings till they dragged on the ground and then try to strut among his hens with a domineering pomposity of his sober days. His strut invariably ended in his falling ignominiously on his nose, and his struggles to regain his equilibrium were equal to the drunken gymnastics of footloose.

"The exhibition the intoxicated gobbler made of himself created unmistakable merriment. If not disgust, in his harem, and the hens would draw apart in groups and watch the antics of their lord in shocked silence. The turkey never failed to get drunker and drunker, and at last would totter and fall and give up to the influence of the liquor. Then was the time to kill the bird, and its head was cut off while the turkey was in its stupor. That custom is fortunately obsolete now. I don't think it would be a very inspiring sight for one to witness nowadays, but in the old times the stiffest testotolerator did not seem to see anything wrong in making the Thanksgiving turkey so good and drunk. I suppose that would come under the head of cruelty to animals now. At any rate, it should."

FARM AND STOCK

Items of Interest to Farmers and Live Stock and Poultry Raisers.

Dispose of all stock that will be of no use this winter; feed is high, and the good stock needs the room.

Give the calves the best care you can this winter. They are your dairy of tomorrow.

If people would only take the trouble to plant a new tree for every one they cut down, the forestry question would be solved.

Not bearing trees planted along all the small branches and in the fence corners will increase the beauty and value of the farm.

For the strawberry patch nothing is more beneficial than a good covering of stable manure applied in the fall or early winter.

Of all things a horse hates to lie down in a filthy bed. By nature he is a cleanly animal. He is worthy of a good, clean bed every day that he lives.

The way to make money out of the horse breeding business is to breed horses that will sell; something that the people want. Good horses pay, scrubs do not.

Plenty of fresh air in the henhouse is good, but it does not pay to expose the bird to too much cold weather. Drafts are worse than extreme cold and should be guarded against.

People, usually so careful in other respects, entirely neglect to keep an extra rooster for emergency, and sometimes suffer loss through accident to the male during the breeding season.

Constant care is necessary in marketing the egg crop. Every egg should be carefully wiped free from all dirt spots and the eggs packed in individual cases containing one dozen each.

Some poultrymen pick the feathers from their hens at the beginning of the moulting season and feed lightly. As soon as the feathers grow again it is claimed the hens begin to lay and continue all fall and winter.

When you see a calf that is everything that could be asked for in the way of gentleness, there is every prospect that she will make a good dairy cow. A wild calf can hardly ever be made fit for the dairy.

The government crop report just issued estimates this year's tobacco crop at 807.8 pounds per acre, against 820.2 a finally estimated last year. The increase is due to the fact that the crop was better than last year.

Good Cough Medicine for Children and Grown Folks, Too.
"We could hardly do without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," says Mrs. Flora Despain, of Bloyd, Ky. "I found it to be so good for the cough and have used it for years. I can heartily recommend it to all who have coughs and croup in children and grown folks, too." The above shows the implicit confidence that many mothers place in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, a confidence based on many years' experience in the use of it. No one need hesitate to use this remedy for it contains no chloroform, opium or other narcotics and may be given to a child as confidently as to an adult. For sale by The Leo Haydon Drug Co.

dictated total production is 865,184,955 pounds, against 718,061,000 pounds last year.

The barns which are warmest are not the most healthful for a sheep. What sheep want is plenty of fresh air and freedom from cold winds and storms. They do not care how cold it is, if snow and fierce blasts do not reach them.

Don't you listen to the man that wants to buy the best lambs out of your flock, if they are good for anybody, they are good for you. Build your flock up, not tear it down that way.

The future farmer must be educated. If the boys cannot attend the agricultural colleges a systematic course of agricultural reading at home is possible during the winter evenings, and the time could not be better employed.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—Rub to a cream a tablespoonful of sugar and two of butter. Into this beat four eggs, stir a teaspoonful of baking powder into three cups of graham flour, add the butter and egg mixture, and beat very hard for three minutes. Turn into heated and greased muffin tins and bake in a very hot oven.

The movable farrowing pen to be placed in some warm, sheltered nook and from which the pigs may later, run out and find exercise and pasture, is meeting with more favor among marketers of early pigs. It is merely a large coop with a tight floor and single window that may be sheltered, in case of severe weather. A good bed and frequent attention are essential.

It sometimes happens that a substitute for green food must be found, in which case raw vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, rutabagas, etc., answer very well. Apples are always relished. Even pumpkins are not refused. Cut the pumpkin in halves, remove the seeds and the hens will do the rest.

Get all of the tools and machinery put away in the shed for winter. But oil or axle grease on plow shares and cultivator shovels to keep them bright and prevent a lot of extra work when taken out for use next spring. On the first rainy or stormy day go into the tool or implement shed and give all the machinery a good coat of paint with plenty of oil in it. A day's work and two dollars worth of paint will save $25 worth of machinery.

According to preliminary estimates made by the United States Department of Agriculture the 1909 winter wheat crop of the United States is 422,920,000 bushels against 437,908,000 bushels in 1908, and a five year average of 412,719,000 bushels.

The spring wheat crop for 1909 is placed at 291,848,000 bushels, against 236,694,000 bushels in 1908, and a five year average of 237,791,000.

Croup Cured and a Child's Life Saved.

"It affords me great pleasure to add my testimony to that of the thousands who have been benefited by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My child, Andrew, when only three years old was taken with a severe attack of croup, and I cannot describe the suffering he endured. I was told to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy his life was saved and to-day he is a robust and healthy boy. I can say that this remedy has been in use for many years. Liver Trouble Remedy Free

Any intelligent person can be his own doctor in the ordinary case of liver trouble, for the symptoms cannot be mistaken. If the white of the eye becomes yellowish, if the skin becomes sallow, if pimples and blotches appear, if the bowels do not move, if you have sick headache, if you are bilious, you may be sure that your liver is torpid or inactive.

The quickest and surest remedy yet known for the cure of liver trouble is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This wonderful remedy is not only a laxative, but a tonic as well. It will start the flow of gastric juice, thereby soon enabling the liver to do its work naturally. A bottle of this great liver remedy can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1, and in many cases a single bottle has cured a chronic case.

For example, John W. Lee, 418 S. Pennsylvania ave., Indianapolis, Ind., had a stomach and very long-standing case of liver trouble, with pimples, blotches, humors, etc., and it cured him. Mrs. B. Flinn, Jackson, Ky., says the name of it. Thousands of families keep it in the house against just such an emergency. A mother can never tell what some member of the family will need a good laxative.

In order to have you or any other sufferer from the liver make a test of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin without personal expense, Dr. Caldwell will send you a free test bottle if you will send your name and address. The sample will show you how pleasant it is to take, how gently it works, and how it cures. You will find it in the house against just such an emergency. A mother can never tell what some member of the family will need a good laxative.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 480 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

"Dying From Home and Lost," is the name of a popular hymn written under unusual circumstances. Two young men, having been brought up in the same neighborhood, became railroad bridge-builders. An accident occurred in which one of them was fatally hurt. The physician told him he could live but a few hours, and he asked his companion to pray for him, but he insisted that he did not know how to pray. The dying man asked that a song be sung, but not one of the 50 or 75 railroad men around his cot could sing. He asked that a chapter be read, but no Bible could be found, and almost with his last breath, he said: "Not a prayer, nor a song, nor a word from the good book—thousands of miles from mother and sister. I am dying from home and lost." This sad incident were the circumstances that gave birth to this song.

Companion, draw nigh, they say I must die,
Early the summons has come from on high,
The way is so dark, and yet I must go,
Oh, that such sorrow you never may know.

CHORUS

Only a prayer, only a tear,
Oh, that mother and sister were here;
Only a song, 'twill comfort and cheer,
Only a word from that Book so dear.

Ah, can you not bow and pray with me now?

Sad the regret we have never learned how

To come before Him who only can save,
Leading in triumph, through death and the grave.

And can you not sing a song of His love,

How He came down from the mansions above,
To bleed and to die on Calvary's tree,
Bringing salvation to sinners like me.

Alas! it is so; but thus it must be;
No word of comfort or promise for me;
To die without God, or hope in His Son,
Covered in darkness, bereaved and undone.

Oh, people of God who have His blessed word,

Will you not heed the command of your Lord,

And publish to all of Adam's lost race
Pardon, forgiveness, salvation through grace?

Kills To Stop The Fiend.

The worst foe for 12 years of John Deyo, of Gladwin, Mich., was a running ulcer. He paid doctors over $400.00 without benefit. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve killed the ulcer and cured him. Cures Fever-Sores, Boils, Felons, Eczema, Salt Rheum. Infallible for Piles, Burns, Scalds, Cuts, Corns. 25c at Hayden & Robertson's.

A Financial Success.

Secretary Newman has made his annual report to the State Fair Board this week. It shows that the net profits of the fair this year were $19,360 against $13,264.52 last year, or a net increase over last year's exhibit of $6,096.31. The total gate admission for the six days this year were 104,942. This showing is certainly very gratifying to the people of Kentucky, and indicates that our people appreciate and will support this great enterprise for the development of our State.

The Leo Hayden Drug Co. Sells a Remedy for Catarrh on that Liberal Basis.

Breathe Hymel on the germ-ridden membrane, and it will kill the germs, and cure catarrh.

There is no other way—you must get where the germs are before you can destroy them.

And when catarrh germs have disappeared, other things will happen; there will be no more hawking, not even in the morning; that offensive breath will disappear; there will be no more obnoxious mucus, or coughing, or sneezing, or huskiness of voice, or difficulty in breathing. All these disagreeable accessories of the demon catarrh will disappear, and as they go the glow of health will return, and all the strength and energy that was formerly used in combating the maddening catarrh, will bring back your vitality and ambition, will make a new, healthy, happy being of you in a few weeks.

The Leo Hayden Drug Co. will sell you a complete Hymel outfit for $1.00. This includes a fine inhaler, a bottle of Hymel (pronounced High-o-mee), and instructions for use. Sold by leading druggists everywhere. Extra bottles 50 cents. And bear in mind, money back: Hymel doesn't cure.

EASY THING

For the American Farmer to Feed the People.—Secretary Wilson Talks.

Some day the steady increase in population in the United States is bound to overtax the ability of the farmer to provide for its sustenance, but that day is remote, according to Secretary Wilson, of the Agricultural Department, says a dispatch from Washington. Nor will it be necessary in the immediate future to import grain for bread, notwithstanding the doleful predictions of some publicists. Everything depends upon the disposition of the American farmer to make the most of the resources of his land, and to improve his methods of agriculture with the needs of the people.

The prospects for a great increase in the production of wheat is excellent, in the opinion of Secretary Wilson, and for two reasons—first, the greatly enhanced market value of that staple would surely tempt the American farmers to plant more wheat, and second, thanks to the discovery of the possibility of growing durum wheat in a large part of the country hitherto regarded as unavailing, there would be a great addition to the total of the annual crop.

Last year no less than 60,000,000 bushels of durum wheat were grown in the United States, and Dr. Galloway, who is making a special study of the possibilities of this new grain, seconded the Secretary's hopeful view of the situation by interpreting the remark that at twenty-one stations in the West investigators were ascertaining the conditions best adapted to its growth.

But the department does not like the methods that are being pursued by the growers. "Soil robbery," exclaimed Dr. Galloway, and the secretary assented to the designation. Great syndicates are farming tracts of 10,000 acres in wheat, planting the crop again and again without regard to the necessary rotation that would insure the soil against exhaustion.

That was one of the things the Secretary had in mind when he said that better farming methods would be required to produce all the wheat that the American people would need. He pointed out as worthy of imitation the European practice, where on lands that had been farmed for ages, food grains were steadily and profitably grown. The secret was in the rotation; a tract would be divided into at least three parts, and the best portion planted in wheat, the second best in barley and the third in oats, the following year there would be a shift and legumes and grasses would also be grown to enrich the soil. In that manner the farms were kept at a high standard.

"Probably not," he replied, "but there is no telling what might follow such a disturbance in the industrial and financial world as we had in 1907, so should we again meet such a crisis, it is possible that there would again be 50c wheat."

CONGRESSMAN BEN JOHNSON.

Numerous friends of Representative Ben Johnson, of the Fourth Congressional District, are expecting the Congressman to make his announcement shortly as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor. As a matter of fact, Mr. Johnson's friends have been hard at work for months. They say that the Congressman's gubernatorial boom is in fine shape. In fact, they claim that his stock is a hundred per cent. higher now than it was before the last election. As Secretary of the Democratic State Campaign Committee Mr. Johnson had much to do with the campaign the Democrats made in the State, and the fact that the next Legislature will be largely Democratic has not worked to Mr. Johnson's disadvantage. The Fourth District man is a shrewd politician, and the chances are that whenever he does make formal announcement of his candidacy he will have assurances that will lead him to believe that he will be a sure winner. Mr. Johnson does not take things for granted. He has to be shown, and he never takes a step in politics until he knows positively where his foot is going to land.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

To Tobacco Growers.

(Contributed.)

Owing to serious misunderstandings the Burley Tobacco Growers of Washington county who pooled their crops of tobacco in 1906 and 1907 have been loath to re-instate for the 1909 crop. The Executive Board at Lexington learning of the fact sent to Springfield on Nov. 18, as members of that body, a committee composed of the Hon. Lester Witherspoon, of W. of Wood county, and Hon. E. T. Pollard, of Shelby county, a member of Representative. Tobacco Growers met with these gentlemen and after a thorough discussion and explanation, the satisfaction of every one present was reached, and entire harmony prevailed. As we understand the proposition of the Burley pool, is that the entire crop is to be handled and sold within the bounds of the county by establishing pricing houses and warehouses. This the burley farmers propose to establish at the expense of the Society, not asking our people for a single cent. It occurs to us this is a fine opportunity to the burley growers as the pooling of the 1906 and 1907 crops proved a success beyond conception in doubling the price of tobacco. If our burley growers would enlist, as we think they should, it will bring prosperity to county and surrounding country; it will establish a real lasting market at Springfield, the benefits derived will not only increase the price of the product, but it will prove a great benefit to the growers from the fact the tobacco is handled in every way at actual cost to the grower. It will be sold and paid for before it leaves the county; purchaser paying all freight charges, keeping the proceeds of the entire crop in the bounds of the county. There are several features in the burley plan that will prove advantageous to the growers. We will not take space to mention, but we suggest that the growers investigate and consider carefully. The growers have among them J. B. Allen, of Tennessee, who has for the past five years, been in the forefront of the splendid fight the dark tobacco growers have made in the dark growing section of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia. There are advertised appointments for the next to weeks, and we hope our

THE QUEST OF THE RED SLIPPER.

Dicky secured the Prize and Got His Reward.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.
[Copyright, 1900, by American Press Association.]

An hour after dinner on that first Saturday evening Dicky Ames left his comfortable chair in the smoking room and made his way to the great entrance hall, where the younger guests were gathered about a roaring drift-wood fire.

He leaned against the high chimney-piece and from his shadowy corner watched the light and sparkle of Kitty Austin's lovely dark face. Once her soft eyes met his wistful glance, and she threw him a smile that set his heart to beating heavily.

"Kitty says she shall not dance until her slipper has been found," laughed Edith Bolter, with a mischievous glance at Dicky.

He leaned forward and glanced down at the hearth, where a little red slipper rested lightly on the fender. The other foot was hidden amid the soft fluffiness of Kitty's red skirt.

"Where did you lose it?" asked Dicky eagerly.

Kitty blushed, and a distressed look came into her beautiful eyes. Dicky remembered that he had met a similar glance across the dinner table earlier in the evening.

"Miss Austin won't tell," drawled Chambers lazily, "but it is a fact that she has not stirred from her chimney corner since dinner."

A laugh went around the circle, but Dicky winced at the air of quiet possession which Mark Chambers had assumed toward Kitty. He drew a long breath and turned away.

"I will find the slipper," he said, coloring boyishly.

"And Kitty shall give you the first dance," bantered Edith.

Dicky paused. "I will be honored," he said stiffly. "But the service is its own reward."

The men stirred uneasily, and Chambers half rose from his seat.

DICKY AMES SAT UPON THE PROSTRATE BODY OF A MAN.

only to sink down beside Kitty on the settle.

"I prefer this seat to deeds of venture," he said carelessly, with a smile at Kitty.

But Miss Austin was looking around at the circle of beautiful faces. She lifted her eyes and flashed a strange glance toward the only face which reflected her own fresh, unspoiled youth.

And Dicky, with that look engraved upon his clean heart, made his way toward the dining room with a dizzy look in his blue eyes and an amazing wonder twitting his forehead.

It could not be possible that lovely little Kitty Austin, whom he had loved so hopelessly, would look at a struggling young lawyer, one so painfully young and diffident and so obviously struggling, but—

He pushed the dining room door softly open and found himself in total darkness. It was characteristic of Dicky's romantic and chivalrous nature that he would not profane this quest with the sputtering glare of a prosaic match or the white light of the electric lights.

He took a few steps forward and touched the polished edge of the table. Then he dropped to his knees on the soft rug and crawled under the big piece of furniture.

His fingers groped over the floor and suddenly closed upon a bit of soft kid, which as suddenly wriggled out of his grasp. The next instant a pair of long arms were twisted about him, and he was writhing in silent combat with an unseen foe.

Over and over they rolled, the strange man panting heavily and muttering angry imprecations under his breath as Dicky strove with him for the possession of the red slipper.

It was snatched from Dicky's grasp, and the high heel came in sharp contact with his temple, and he felt the blood trickling down into his eyes. There was a few seconds' pause that tore his fingers as he fought for the prize. The man laughed exultantly at Dicky's involuntary exclamation of pain, and then they clutched one another savagely, and Dicky Ames got the upper hold.

A heavy chair toppled over with a crash on the parquet floor, and almost instantly a door opened, and Saunders, the butler, snapped on the lights.

His shout of surprise brought a chorus of shrieking maid servants, while through the opposite door the guests streamed into the room.

In the midst of wild disorder Dicky Ames sat upon the prostrate body of a man, a being with sullen eyes and heavy jaw, who glared at them savagely. Near him on the rug lay a gleaming revolver and a black mask and a burglar's jimmy.

Dicky Ames, with blood stained face and one eye rapidly discoloring, with torn clothing, the white expanse of shirt front stained an ominous crimson, minus collar and tie—Dicky Ames gazed, slightly bewildered, but smiling, was holding the twitching hands of his captive in a strong grip, while in his other hand dangled a tattered red slipper!

"Has wicked a-lookin' specimen has Eli care to know, sir," wheezed Saunders as he carefully disposed his bulk upon the unfortunate burglar. "Burr one of you gentlemen will kindly telephone to the police Ill will relieve Mr. Hames."

Dicky got stiffly upon his feet and looked dazedly about him. Chambers was eying him with jealous distrust.

"Where did you find him, Ames?" he sneered.

"Under the table," returned Dicky shortly.

"In the dark?"

Dicky nodded and peered about for a sight of Kitty.

"She is sitting by the fire alone," whispered Edith Bolter, with a friendly little push.

Silently they opened ranks to let the victor through, and more than one man stared enviously after him.

Some one had sped the news to Kitty, and she was sitting on the settle with bright, tearful eyes and very pink cheeks when Dicky came marching down the long hall, the red slipper swinging from one bleeding hand. He dropped on his knees before her.

Kitty thrust out a hand with stocking-lined foot, and Dicky tenderly fitted the little torn slipper to its place. She touched his broad shoulder with her fan.

"Rise, Sir Knight of the Slipper," she said, with a tremulous little laugh.

Dicky sat beside her on the high backed settle, in her tender, compassionate eyes a bleeding and scarred veteran. Soft strains of a waltz came from the drawing room.

"Kitty," said the struggling young lawyer, with strange diffidence, "I suppose you couldn't—er—you couldn't care enough about me—to—"

His voice faltered, and he looked down at the soft mist of dark hair beside him. And, lo, the dark hair touched his shoulder for a fleeting instant as Kitty whispered softly:

"Indeed, indeed, I could!"

True Stories About Large Feet.

The conversation turned on big feet, remarks a writer in "The Bits," when one of the company said he believed his pal, Smith, would take some beating in that line.

"I was out walking with Smith one day when he slipped down with the soles of his boots pointing to a grocer's window. The grocer rushed out to inquire who was putting the shutters up."

"That's pretty fair," said a soldier who was present, "but a fellow in our company best it hollow. After a sharp fight with the enemy we were obliged to retreat, then on looking back we saw one of our men standing upright on the field. The fact was the poor fellow had got such feet that he never fell down when he was shot."

"Well," said a horse dealer who sat in the corner, "that's rather tall, but I have known a try-out horse come down to our stables the other day in a hurry to hire a horse for a journey he was going on. 'I'll have that one,' said he, pointing to a horse in the yard. 'Why, there isn't a man in the world who can ride that animal,' I said. 'He'll work in a cart or plow, but no one can stay on his back.' 'I'll try him any way,' said the stranger as he sprang into the saddle. I expected to see him pitched off, but the horse looked around, saw the man's feet and trotted quietly off. He thought he was between a pair of shafts."

An Exciting Situation.

It was the ninth inning, and the visiting team was at bat. The score was a tie, and every spectator in grand stand or bleacher was on edge. To make it more exciting the bases were full, with two men out, and the team's best batter was up, with three balls and no strikes to his credit.

In this trying moment the pitcher flung one straight at the plate. "Str-r-r-like one!"

A yell broke from thousands of throats. Again the ball darted toward the plate.

"Str-r-r-like two!"

Another unearthly yell went up from the assemblage. Then a death-like stillness fell over all as the pitcher carefully adjusted himself for the next and last effort.

In the midst of this pervading hush a young lady just back of the catcher loudly appealed to her escort:

"Will I do those the Giants win?"

"They'll stand a good show if they put this man out."

"Everybody here seems to want to have him put out, don't they, Willie?"

"They certainly do."

"Then why doesn't one of those idle policemen put the horrid thing out?"—Judge.

MR. BRYAN'S PLANS

In response to repeated demands, coming from every section of the United States, Mr. Bryan will conduct a vigorous Campaign of Education through The Commonwealth, and assist in the organization of "An educational club in every precinct." These clubs will promote the work of education among the voters on all political questions affecting the American people.

To advance this educational plan, each issue of The Commonwealth will contain a special article on some pertinent political subject, designed to present, in an instructive way, authentic historical information, to give valuable statistical data, to carefully analyze the opposing arguments, and to discuss their application to present-day conditions.

The following subjects, and others, upon which all Americans should be accurately informed, will be discussed:

The Tariff (by schedule as it affects the individual); Postal Savings Banks; Imperialism; Colonialism; The Rights of the States; State-Wide Primary Laws; Inheritance Tax; Initiative and Referendum; House of Representatives; Committee of Government; For Citizens The Trust Question; Regulation of Railroads and Other Corporations; Popular Election of Senators; Income Tax.

This series will afford a vast fund of political information for any citizen regardless of party affiliation, provide excellent material for all students of economic questions, and will be a veritable compendium of politics for schools and debating societies.

FREE BOOKS FOR EVERYONE

The Commonwealth, to start this campaign of education, and to place this series of articles in the hands of as many voters as possible, will give FREE, and express prepaid anywhere in the United States, the following splendid book:

The Life and Works of Abraham Lincoln—Six volumes, 1,600 pages. Regular $1.50. Bound in leather. Each volume contains a full and complete introduction and special articles by Theodore Roosevelt, President; Taft, Governor Hughes, Henry Watterson and Lincoln Douglas, Senators; and full, later speeches and important addresses.

Mr. Bryan's own book, describing his tour around the world and journeys through Europe. His impressions are highly instructive and entertaining. Contains 316 Imperial Colored pages, over 100 superb engravings from photographs taken or procured by him. Richly bound in extra English cloth, gold side and back. $2.00.

Start this week among your friends and secure these books FREE, any or all of them, for a little every work. It is not hard to secure subscribers for The Commonwealth. It is taken by people of all parties, and contains departments of interest to every member of the family. UNITED STATES MONEY

There Are Ten Kinds on Uncle Sam's Official List.

ALL ARE NOT LEGAL TENDER.

Some of the Most Imposing of the Paper Currency May Be Lawfully Refused When Offered in Payment of an Obligation of Any Kind.

Officially there are just ten kinds of money in circulation in the United States. Could you name them all off-hand? Do you know which of those besides gold coin are legal tender and in what amount? It may be that "all money looks alike to you," but there's a difference, and below is the list:

Gold coins, standard silver dollars, subsidiary silver, gold certificates, silver certificates, treasury notes (1890), United States notes (greenbacks), national bank notes, nickel coins and bronze coins.

Looking upon this formidable classification of United States money as made by the treasury department, it becomes more formidable when it is considered from the highly technical point of view as a legal tender. Some of the most imposing of the paper currency is not a legal tender at all, while as to the minor coins, they are legal tender in such small amounts as to startle the average layman. It may be well to recall to this layman that the term "legal tender" owes its significance to the fact that in payment of debt or obligation of any kind it can be forced upon the creditor "in full of all demands."

Gold certificates, silver certificates and national bank notes, of which such enormous numbers circulate everywhere, are not legal tender. If you have plenty of money and if you have forced Jones to sue you in order to get judgment, Jones can turn down every one of these bills tendered in payment and force you to dig up something better.

Should Jones do such a thing you might conceive the idea of fixing him by introducing a whole lot of silver coins upon him. But you want to know what you're doing there, too, for he'll take only $10 worth of halves, quarters and dimes, while of nickels and copper cents only 25 cents value is legal tender.

But as to the standard silver dollar, there's no limit upon your showing them out to Jones. This old "dollar of our dads" still is the real thing in all business transactions unless some clause in a contract has provided otherwise. Jones may refuse the silver certificate, but when you dig up the metal dollar you go unquestioned at their face value. And 1,000 of them weigh 58.32 pounds.

Treasury notes of the act of 1890 are legal tender to the face value in payment of all debts, public and private, unless expressly stipulated in the contract.

Strictly speaking, the United States notes or greenbacks are legal tender, with the exception of duties on imports and interest on the public debt. Practically, however, since the resumption of specie payment in 1879, greenbacks have been received freely and without question by the government, though the law respecting them hasn't been changed.

While the gold and silver certificates are not legal tender as between individuals, both issues are receivable for all government dues of whatever kind, in this respect legally more acceptable than is the greenback.

National bank notes, while not legal tender and not receivable for duties on imports, still may be paid by the government for salaries and all debts of the government except interest due and in redemption of national currency.

By special enactment no foreign coin of any kind or denomination shall be a legal tender in the United States, so that if some time the street car conductor does balk at the chance Canadian dime fished from your pocket keep cool and dig for something that is United States. It's your move.—Chicago Tribune.

Fun For the Boy.

"So you tried to convince your son that he was not too old to be subjected to corporal discipline?"

"That's what I did," answered Farmer Corntassel. "I gave him a good old fashioned dressing down in the woodshed just the same as if he had been ten years younger."

"Harry, dear," said the young wife on her deathbed, "when I am gone forget me. Seek some one to fill the place I leave vacant. Don't delay. Never mind if the world says. This man has no sooner buried one wife than he begins looking for another. I know what is best for you. The longer you put it off the less you will desire it, and I don't wish you to become again used to bachelor habits."

"The place you will leave vacant will remain vacant."

"I have given you my wish; I can't argue with you, and I can't remain with you to influence you, though, if possible, I will do so from the other extreme. One word more. If you delay and become a middle-aged or an old man before marrying again choose a young woman who will bear you children to love you and for you to love. When you think of me picture me watching over you trying to lead you in the path that I know will alone bring you happiness."

When all was over and he began the life without her these words came back to him, and he was wonder-stricken that they should have been spoken by a woman, and that woman his own wife. "But the realization of her wish is impossible," he reasoned, "because I shall never find the woman who can fill the place she has left vacant, and if I could find one who could fill it I would not wish it filled."

On this account and from preference he hugged her memory and ignored her wishes. Shortly before her death and while she was in the flush of health her portrait had been painted. This portrait he took from the wall where it hung and placed it over his desk in his study. He was a literary man, and his work was influenced by the woman whose mental and moral strength and virtues were memorized in the portrait.

A year passed, and he still loved a memory. Was it love or the memory of a love? He never asked himself the question. He did not doubt that it was love. It might not occupy his mind, he admitted, as much as at first, but this is true of one we love who has been gone a long while. Those who are absent do not occupy our thoughts as if they were present, but on their return we find them as dear to us as ever. At times he would remember her earnest look when she had made her last strange request and would experience a momentary troubled regret that he could not accede to it. Then he would recall the reason and would be satisfied.

One day five years after her death he stood looking at her picture. It seemed to him that there was a more mature look about it than he had before noticed. The lips did not appear so red, the eyes not quite so bright. Then a sudden glancing thought struck him. He was growing older, and some unexplained mental or, rather, soul construction within him was enabling him to see her growing older with him. Whence it sprung or what power had planted it he cared not. It was there. They would grow old together.

Another period passed, and he noticed a greater change. The cheek seemed to have lost some of its roundness. The nostril was thinner. There were faint whitish pencil streaks on the hair that might be the effect of light on the canvas or a beginning of white hair. There were lines about the eyes and on the neck. Two feelings within him contended for mastery—a pleasure that he was not leaving her to youth behind him and a distress that her beauty was fading.

These mingled feelings did not leave him. He thought the distress that she should change was unnatural. Does a husband regret to see the wife he loves grow plain? Does she, indeed, grow plain to him? The latter question set him off on another course of thought. Supposing a man loses a wife of twenty. At forty or fifty she comes back to him. Is love the same as if she had grown old beside him? He could not make up his mind that it would be. From this time he noticed a change in his feelings toward the picture. It was not the same to him. In vain he tried to get used to this singular transformation in it, which he attributed to some mystical soul effect. He felt that it was being diverging. Instead of growing old together they were growing old on different times. Then it began to be repulsive to him.

He was struggling with a desire to remove it when one morning a girl of twenty stumbled into his study. Her cheeks were ruddy enough with the blush that spread itself from her forehead to her dimpled chin. A startled look was in her eye, followed quickly by an embarrassed smile that parted her lips, showing her white teeth. Then hurriedly withdrawing, she shut the door.

From this vision of youthful loveliness he turned to the picture. It was a portrait of one the same age as the girl who had entered and withdrawn. Once it had so appeared to him. Now it was the likeness of a middle-aged woman. He did not stop to wonder, as he had often done before, why this was so. He went out and followed the receding girl.

After he had married her he put the picture of his first wife away. To others it is the portrait of a young woman. To him he knows not what it is, for he never looks at it. He believes the soul effect he had experienced was sent by his wife to bend him to her request.

UNCONSCIOUS GOOD.

By F. A. MITCHELL.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

I was an artist struggling for recognition. I had painted picture after picture in the hope of making reputation and had failed. A friend said to me, "Paint something from the heart." I resolved to take his advice. Months passed while I was trying to find a subject. Then I decided to attempt to paint the face of a good woman. She might be beautiful, but she must be good. Then I hunted a long while for a model. I found none. There were comely models and there were models who were good, but the good was not stamped upon the features to a degree required. At last I gave up trying to find a model except for the purely physical part of the picture. I selected one who would do well in this respect and put her face on the canvas. Then I paid her and sent her away.

My work now commenced. I should not call it work, for creation is not work. It is work it is worthless. And yet what I did was worth more. I know, because it was worthless. I painted over my canvas till the paint was too thick to take on more, then transferred the face to another and recommenced. Three months passed. I had made several such transfers, and every canvas had become a day. Finally I transferred the face once more and, before beginning to put on what I was attempting, decided to take a rest.

I soon began to think that my rest so far as that special picture was concerned would never end. It seemed to me that to produce a face typical of the good without a model must necessarily be a failure.

One day I saw a girl in a trolley car. She sat directly opposite me. What man there was in the car saw me and said to himself, "That's the woman I wish for my wife." This I said to myself. I sat for a long while looking at the face, and when the girl got out of the car it was indelibly fixed in my memory.

I went to my studio and put it on canvas. Before I knew from my seat at the easel my object was accomplished—that is, the expression I desired to produce was there.

When my picture was finished I submitted it to several critical people. They all pointed out its faults, but if what I had so coveted was there none of them discovered it. I knew, however, I had sufficient influence to secure place for my production in a prominent gallery. It was hung near a famous picture. I watched the throngs pass mine seeking for its great rival. "Where is it?" they all asked referring to the latter. "There." They approached it reverently and stood gazing on it admiringly.

"If this picture is so great why do these people need to have it pointed out to them?" I asked.

But there may have been envy in my heart.

Occasionally one would pause before my picture, but not for long, and I soon gave up hope that it would secure me recognition.

While it was hanging in its place I was a frequent visitor to the gallery. I loved to look at it. Was this because it pictured the face that had attracted me or because I believed in my heart that after all this neglect I had achieved in it an expression of the good? I did not know.

One day while I was in the room where it was hanging who should enter but the girl I had seen in the trolley. Like the others she came to look at the famous picture but pointed out to her, spent some time before it, then glanced at others till her eye lighted on my production. At once she went to it and stood looking at it intently. When she had spent a long while thus I approached, took position beside her and looked up at it myself.

"Pardon me," I said to her. "Can you tell me who painted this picture?"

"No. I know nothing about art or artists."

"Do you admire it?"

"I don't know. I would love to be like it."

"It seems to me," I said, looking down the face on the canvas to hers of flesh and blood, "that it is like you."

"Do you think so?" she said. "It seemed to me that there is something about the shape, the features and all that resembling me, but there is something else I would wish were mine and is not."

"And that is?"

"I can't tell you. It seems to me such a look as should be in pictures of the number of good."

A flood of light, of comfort, poured upon my brain. Possessing the gift I had transferred from her to the canvas, she recognized it at once, but not herself—only in the picture.

That was a long while ago. Several years passed, during which my production, so far as I could discover, attracted little or no attention. Then here and there I would see a notice, a newspaper item, that people were beginning to observe it. Then it began to be spoken of as a favorite. Now it is pointed out as a work of art.

"Why is this?" I don't know, I have a theory. But do not place much confidence in it. It is this: Like aesthetes the musician recognizes music; a poetic nature recognizes poetry. The pure see purity—not in themselves, in others. But purity is rare. In the throngs that have seen my picture a few have seen themselves reproduced in it. Not recognizing themselves, they have been drawn to it. They have held the others.

WILLING TO STAY.

He Did Love a Little Game, No Matter Where He Played.

A man went to heaven, and after he had been there a few days he grew so lonesome that he told St. Peter he wanted to go down and take a look at the other place.

"But if you go down there you can't get back," said St. Peter.

"Well, I only want to go just to look at the place," said the man, so St. Peter agreed to give him a return pass if he promised to be back along toward night.

He agreed, took the pass and started off. When he reached his destination the first thing he saw was a party of old friends playing poker, but they wouldn't let him into the game because he admitted that he had no money.

"Well, I'll fix that all right," he said as he left them and wandered off through one of the corridors. Pretty soon he came back and threw a big roll of bills down on the table and demanded chips. They all looked in amazement at the size of his pile and wanted to know where he got it, saying that they would play with him unless he laid them.

"That's all right," he said. "Give me the chips. I sold my pass."

One Point Settled.

A new family had moved into the house next door to the Townsends, and little Kitty Townsend on the back porch of her home was collecting the acquaintances of the little girl on the opposite porch, about ten feet away.

"What's your name?" she asked.

"Florence," answered the newcomer.

"What's yours?"

"Katherine, but they always call me Kitty. The name of the folks that live next door."

"You folks don't do that, do you?" lived there before you moved in was Jones."

"Our name's Thompson."

"Where is Thompson? You didn't know Jones, did you?"

"No."

"They was awful for borrowing. They used to say over to our house once or twice every week and borrow a cupful of coffee for breakfast, and they never paid it back. You folks don't do that, do you?"

"No."

"She says they don't, mamma," called out Kitty, turning her head and speaking to somebody back of the dining room window curtain.

Our Age of Chivalry.

Some say that the age of chivalry is never past. The age of chivalry is never past so long as there is a wrong left unredressed on earth or a man or woman left to say, "I will redress that wrong or spend my life in the attempt." The age of chivalry is never past so long as we have faith enough to say, "God will help me to redress that wrong, or if not me, he will help those that come after me, for his eternal will is to overcome evil with good."—Kingley.

The Intruder.

Clang, clang, bang! Down the street came the fire engines.

Driving along ahead, oblivious of any danger, was a farmer in a ramshackle old buggy. A policeman yelled at him: "Hi, there! Look out! The fire department's coming!"

Turning in by the curb, the farmer watched the hose cart, salvage wagon and engine whiz past. Then he turned out into the street again and drove on. Barely had he started when the hook and ladder came tearing along. The rear wheel of the big truck slewed into the farmer's buggy, smashing it to smithereens and sending the farmer sprawling into the gutter. The policeman ran to his assistance.

"Didn't I tell you to keep out of the way?" he demanded crossly. "Didn't I tell you the fire department was coming?"

"Waal, consarn ye," said the irate farmer, "I did git outter the way for 't' fire department, but what inarnation was them drunken painters in such an all-fired hurry fer?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Common Complaint.

Aunt Mary met her little niece in the park and seized the opportunity to rather the other way round, from Marjory's home. And she got it.

"And how is your papa, dear?" she inquired fondly.

"Oh, papa is critically ill!"

"He is? Why, what is the matter?" "I don't know—not much, I think. But he criticizes me, criticizes me, and he criticizes the cook and most everything. He is very critically ill. Ma says so."

HINTS FOR FARMERS

To Cure Foot Rot of Sheep.

In the cure of hoof ail in sheep two things are necessary: First, the sheep must be kept in from wet pasture, as the feet during treatment must be kept from getting wet. A well bedded stable is the best place. Second, all remedies should be used in a liquid form and of a kind that the sheep will not can safely be immersed in and soaked for full ten minutes and the solution not injure healthy tissue. The trouble in using ointments and powdered remedies is that the germs are deeper seated than they will reach and may exist even on the skin above the feet and later infect the foot. Many agents will kill the germ which produces foot rot, but the cheapest is sulphate of copper solution, made by dissolving a pound of sulphate in two gallons of hot water. Place the solution in a shallow trough, clean the feet and cut away all separated tissue from the sole of the foot, then stand the sheep in the solution for ten minutes. Repeat in three days. In case there are some sheep with fungous growths, dip a feather in the better of antimony and wet the growth with it until they are reduced.—National Stockman and Farmer.

To Make a Bran Mash.

The proper way to prepare a bran mash is to use sufficient boiling water to wet all the bran thoroughly. This should be done in a bucket, which should then be covered over and the mash allowed to steam for about half an hour. This steaming will partially break the bran, thus making it all the more effective and soothing. It is well to add a pinch of salt. The usual quality of bran used is from a half to three-quarters of a peck.

It is always best to feed the mash in a lukewarm state, but it must never be given while hot. Sometimes the mash is prepared with cold water, but they do not have the same beneficial and soothing effect as when hot water is used. It is the steaming that the bran gets that gives the desired effect. Bran fed dry does not possess any laxative effects and exerts no particular action on the horse's bowels.

Points of a Good Cow.

A cow with her second or third calf is the most desirable of all, and this is undoubtedly the most profitable age to buy cows. As milkers and breeders they have all their best days in front of them and with sufficient time to pay handsomely. Young and old cows are very distinct in appearance. The former have an unmistakable appearance of fullness of flesh and coat, while the old ones are thin and the flesh is shrunk. The teeth give an indication of age, and the horns are often looked to as a guide, the young having smooth horns, while those of the aged are wrinkled. If crossbreeds are bought get them with the greatest tendency toward the best breed the cross has been secured from. Cows with a deep or bull type of head are rarely good milkers. The head should be refined, neck thin, forequarters well, square and robust, with deep, broad thighs.

Pure Breeds Most Profitable.

The pure breeds of stock have been built up through many generations for many purposes. The beef animal has been made to give the highest percentage of dressed meat to gross weight, and as large a per cent of the dressed meat as possible must consist of popular cuts—ribs, loins and hind quarters. The dairy animal has been made to give the largest possible amount of milk and cream in return for the food consumed. And so with all the pure breeds. Some of the highest milkers of the world have been working for years to perfect these animals in this one line—that said animals should give the greatest return in dollars for the food and time bestowed upon them.—New England Homestead.

Farm Improvements.

The farmer should give more consideration to his barns and fences, to his stable and dairy, to all the surroundings of farm life.

A stitch in time saves nine. Repairs save labor and expense. A gate hinge out of order indicates the farmer before every visitor.

Keep everything in working order. It pays. Do not put off until tomorrow repairs to the roof or paint on the porch or the swinging shutters. You labor for a home, and it is foolish to let go to ruin the things your labor in the field has paid for.—Home and Farm.

Setting Out Trees and Shrubs.

For setting out trees and shrubs and your plants at any season spare no time and labor in preparing the soil and digging spacious holes for the reception of the roots of the plants, for upon the successful starting of the roots depends to a very large degree the future success of the plant. Previous to setting out cut off any injured or decayed roots and settle plant in the hole prepared for it, so that none of the roots will be bent or cramped.—Michigan Lumber Farmer.

How Exposed Manure Wastes.

The Cornell experiment station found that two tons of horse manure in an exposed place in five months lost 5 per cent in gross weight, 60 per cent of its nitrogen, 47 per cent of its phosphorus and 76 per cent of its potash. The total loss of plant food was 61 per cent.

Wearing the Collar.

The collar may be worned at from five to seven months of age, according to its habits of eating and its physical condition. The sooner it learns to eat grain and other nutritious feeds the sooner it may be wearied.

The ABC and XYZ of ADVERTISING

A SERIES OF TEN TALKS ON ADVERTISING No. 4

Written by Seymour Eaton of Philadelphia

Don't let newspaper circulation fool you. The newspaper which has the least power to sell goods usually makes the loudest shout about circulation.

Don't skip around from one newspaper to another. Success in advertising comes from hammering away at the same crowd.

Pick out the newspaper which has the kind of readers you want for customers and then stick. When you get things going keep your head. A lineup of canvassers from competitive newspapers will call on you immediately and show you by a process of arithmetic, or it may be of geography, that they can give you twice the circulation at half the price; that whoever advised you didn't know what he was talking about; that if the paper your advertisement is in actually pays you their newspapers will certainly make you a millionaire.

They are all nice fellows and put up good lunches and you like to meet them. Each will tell you that your advertisement is the prettiest thing he ever saw and that your store is a perfect gem. But don't. You can't afford it; at least not unless you have sufficient advertising appropriation to keep copy in all the newspapers continuously.

An eight-inch advertisement in one newspaper will bring much bigger results than a two-inch advertisement in four newspapers.

If you advertise your store to a hundred and fifty thousand people you can safely bank on the fact that in due time everybody will hear about you. People have a way of passing along good news.

The fact that your advertisement appears continuously in a reputable newspaper stimulates public confidence. Your shop advances step by step in the estimation of tens of thousands of people who may be months getting around to make their first purchase.

You can talk to a hundred and fifty thousand people any day of the week through a metropolitan newspaper and make your talk as personal as you wish. You need not employ an interpreter or use a megaphone. Simply talk. That's all. Be sincere about it. Let your words ring true. The people will listen. They like it.

Spend thousands a year on rent and electric light and experienced salesmen and then squeeze out a niggardly hundred or two on advertising—on telling the people that you have the store and the goods and the salesmen, all hanging around waiting. A retail shop that spends $5,000 a year on rent ought at the very lowest estimate spend $10,000 a year on advertising.

Your advertising is not a thing apart from your enterprise. It is your enterprise; a contagion which you yourself create and which, if thoroughly spread, is as enduring as the everlasting hills.
